

An armoured vehicle consists of chassis, a body and an engine compartment. The vehicle is further provided with quasi-windows, each of which is made of bulletproof steel and outside the body has an appearance and form of a conventional vehicle window with at least one video camera, fixed in or near the quasi-window. In a crew compartment on the back side of the quasi-window a monitor is attached with possibility of observation thereon of the current image from the video camera.