

Tubular heat exchanger element is a cylindrical shell with open ends and located outside its vortex. Baffles designed as a cylindrical spring that is fixed to the shell in at least one place with the possibility of moving it turns along the shell. This cylinder is equipped with at least one spring blade to create the axial force of the flow of coolant to the cylindrical coils springs.