

A method of controlling properties of a thermoelectric energy converter comprises the use of control actions that affect the properties of thermoelectric energy converter, in which, for formation of the required properties of the thermoelectric energy converter uses an electric field that has a transverse component to the direction of the electric current flowing through the thermoelectric energy converter and/or the direction of the temperature gradient in thermoelectric converters of energy.